

The Great Reno, Who Is to Appear Here on the Redpath Chautauqua Program

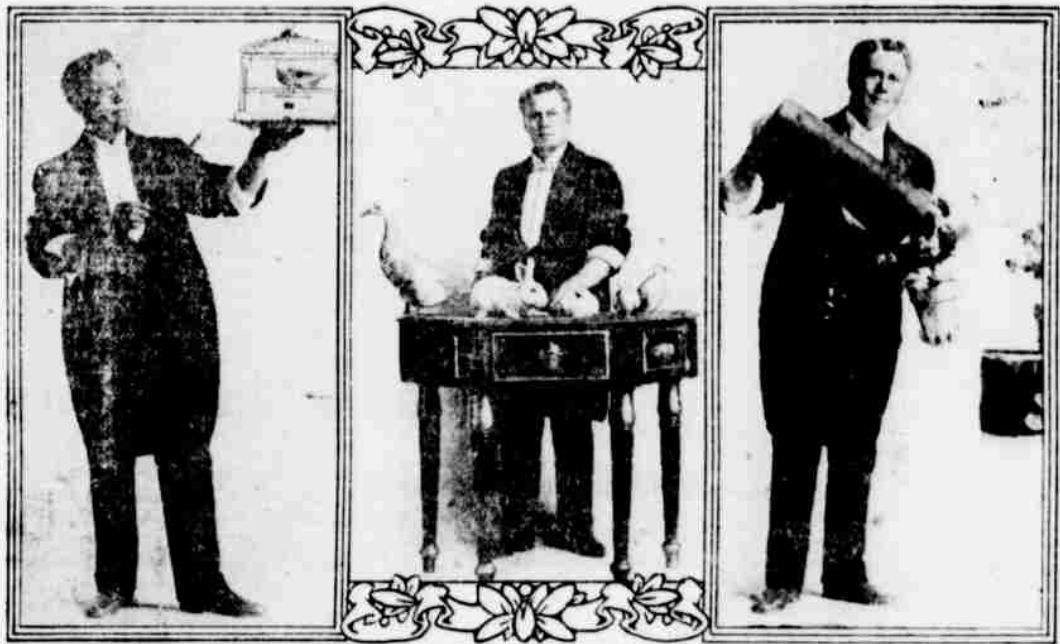

THE great Reno and his assistant are coming on the second night of our forthcoming Chautauqua program in a extraordinary program of magic and illusion. With him come birds, ducks, geese, guinea pigs and rabbits, each with a definite part in the program of mystery.

Reno turns a piece of common paper and a dove rises phoenix-like from the ashes. He apparently tears the 'love' in two, only to find that he has two doves in his hands. He throws a glass of water into the air, and it changes into a beautiful dove and flies away. Reno performs his tricks while in ordinary evening dress and so adroitly as to escape detection in every case. He does things that seem absolutely impossible of execution without the aid of supernatural agency.

Not the least enjoyable feature of Reno's performance is the running fire of comment with which he enlivens everything he does. These fragmentary remarks are full of fun and wit, with flash after flash of good tempered satire aimed at himself or his work. In a performance two hours in length he is able to spring one surprise after another on his audience, keeping every one in a state of breathless wonder and delight until they forget to note the flight of time. The fact that many of these tricks are inventions of his own adds interest to the entertainment.

Miss Clarissa Harrold, Interpreter of Plays, Who Will Be Heard Here at the Chautauqua

MISS CLARISSA HARROLD, interpreter of plays, is to appear here at the Redpath Chautauqua on the second day. Her interpretations of modern dramas have won her recognition that is unusual in one whose platform career has been comparatively brief. Her inherited ability has been strengthened through constant application, hard study and keen insight. Her interpretations are faithful reproductions of the characters as their creators conceived them. Her portrayal of the various roles, with their altogether distinct mannerisms, is so startlingly true to type as to be almost uncanny at times. Her rendition of "Wind Tossed Saxies" will be one of the great features of the forthcoming Chautauqua program.

Editor-Lecturer, Who Is to Speak Here Chautauqua Week

CHARLES L. FICKLIN, who is to lecture on the Redpath Chautauqua program here, is an editor and lecturer who speaks as he writes—clearly and with force.

The Chautauqua has a new figure with new ideas. Mr. Ficklin, a pioneer in the philosophical field who in blazing his trail is not afraid to strike into regions off the beaten path and whose ax cuts deep.

Ficklin makes his hearers think. But he makes them laugh as well. His lectures are the result of nearly a score of years of aggressive newspaper life, where he has met all classes of people with all sorts of problems—problems with which he himself has been wrestling for years. His listeners know they are dealing with a man who has lived his lectures.

His lecture "Men and Machinery" is a journey into the realm of the workman to ascertain whether under the present industrial system man owns the apparatus he has built up or whether he is a tool of the social machinery.

His researches into the relative influence of heredity and environment are active with questions with a new angle to them. Mr. Ficklin has the rare ability of looking at life from the stand points not usually taken. He dodges no issues. He strips away the externalities and hews to the line and deals with fundamentals. His lectures are for men and women with red blood in their veins.

Chautauqua Part of the Essential Machinery of Democracy.

(Editorial From the Chicago Herald.)

THE Chautauqua movement is one of the effective means which the modern world has discovered for creating public opinion. What the ten-cent magazines were a decade ago, what the social centers may be after ten years' struggle, the Chautauqua movement is today. It is a part of the essential machinery of the democracy.

The first Chautauqua was akin to the first woman's club. It was an organization for easy culture. It was intended to be an American contradiction to Aristotle's overpopulated remark to Alexander the Great that there is no royal road to learning. During brief summer sessions the early Chautauqua leaders tried to administer education with the aid of an anesthetic. The patient was not to know what was happening.

But the movement grew and rapidly burst beyond the early "culture" stage. Unconsciously people took part in it. Soon it was a vast and inclusive effort to satisfy the genuine desires of the average American, especially of the men and women who live in the small cities and in the country.

Entertainment was provided for their amusement. Those who craved learning were given the opportunity to meet real scholars. But without the well known public leaders, the men and women who stand for the representative things in national life, were valued forth. The Chautauqua became a great imperial forum for the discussion of the deeper issues of the country. It was an innovative avenue for the expression of liberal thought.

To an extent seldom realized the Chautauqua has aided in making the United States what it is. Men like Judge Ben B. Lindsey were enabled through it to find tremendous audiences for their ideas. The Chautauqua has been a free institution. In it the heart of the American people has beat vigorously. Today 6,000,000 people are animated in the best sense by the movement.

Who can estimate the power which such an organization exerts in a land where persistent public opinion is the ultimate sovereign?

Don't Fatten Breeders.

Be sure and see that the hens in the breeding pens are not too fat. The offspring of any overfat animal is likely to lack vitality and vigor. The same holds true with hens. The loss of many of the chicks which pip the eggs in the incubator and fail to get out of the shell can be attributed to this cause.
